BOTREL REY

Presenting my painting...

Colours, lots of colours... Portraits – portraits of human beings, but also of animals. And also bursts of light, through stained glass windows, reflections in the water... What is the common thread that links such different canvases?

On my part, there is no prior deliberation. It is a force that drives me along this path, and in a way the canvas escapes my own understanding. What fuels my motivation are the thousand and one channels through which Life expresses itself – the mystery of Life. One may see in it the presence of the Divine, and also destinies that elude the will.

That is what I seek – or rather, what stirs me when I stand before my easel.

So yes, there are plenty of colours on my canvases !

Having practised a predominantly artistic profession with passion, when the time came to leave professional *life, I naturally turned to my second passion: painting.

- 2009 : School of Fine Arts – practice in various disciplines.
- 2011 : Painting workshop in Paris – discovery of oil painting.

The brilliance and the smoothness of the medium made it my favourite technique.

In this workshop, we had a monthly class with a Louvre copyist. It was a revelation – I learned a great deal and focused on portraiture, my preferred subject. But are they really portraits, since these beings come from my imagination? They are ethereal in nature; I use colours to bring them back into our world.
